The social impact of the death of a child is immense. Was it even greater in a small fledgling colony? The cemeteries of Perth hold many stories, including those of babies and children who were taken too soon. An individual is only a child for 16 years and during that period there is much change and growth. However, when that time is cut short, what lasting effect does it have on parents, siblings and the community. Come along and hear some of the stories and frustrations of researching the children of the Swan River Colony.
